TWO MEET DEATH IN AUTO COLLISION

Death and injury invaded the happy holiday outing, on Washington's birthday, of the Bishop family, of Daly City. Mr. and Mrs. Noah O. Bishop and their daughter, Miss Eva, and son, Roy Bishop, of 23 Liebig street, near the county line, started for a visit with relatives in Los Gatos, with Roy at the wheel of the family automobile. The terrific crash, a three-cornered collision, occurred at San Carlos, while the family were traveling south. The Bishop car was completely demolished and two members of the family were fatally injured.

Noah Bishop was taken to Mills Memorial hospital, where he succumbed an hour after his arrival with a fractured skull. Mrs. Bishop and Roy and Eva Bishop were taken to the Community hospital at Beresford, where Eva passed away about twenty minutes after her arrival. She had sustained a fractured skull, while the son sustained a fractured skull and a fractured pelvis. At present writing he is still in a critical condition, but has a chance for recovery. The mother, Mrs. Jessie Bishop, returned to her home last Saturday and attended the funeral of her loved ones in Redwood City that afternoon. The mother of the family escaped with minor injuries and shock.

The double funeral was conducted from the chapel of Layng & Tinney, in Redwood City, last Saturday afternoon. Services were conducted from the chapel of Cypress Lawn cemetery at 2 o'clock.

Miss Bishop was manager of the local branch McMaar store on Mission street, near Evergreen avenue, where she had been employed for the past six years, and had many friends who were grievously shocked to hear of her untimely and tragic death.

The occupants of the other cars received minor injuries. A double inquest was held at the Layng & Tinney chapel last Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.

Firemen Discover Still When Answering Alarm

A fire alarm was turned in last Friday afternoon at 2:55 o'clock from the residence of Peter Peterson, 27 Shakespeare street, which was on fire. The firemen arrived and found Peterson using a hose in an attempt to put out the raging fire. Chief of Police John T. Doyle and Officer James Reardon found a 150 gallon still in operation at the place. The still was confiscated upon the orders of Federal officers and destroyed upon orders from them. The fire was caused by an overheated vent leading from the still to the roof.

Peterson was held in Daly City and was later turned over to the Federal officers and placed in the county jail of San Francisco. He was arraigned before Commissioner E. E. Williams last Wednesday, at 10 o'clock, on a charge of violating the internal revenue law. Bail was set at $2,000 or $2,500 bond.

Perpetual Help Parish St. Patrick's Program

The members of Our Lady of Perpetual Help Parish will hold their annual celebration in the Daly City Auditorium, Friday evening, March 16, in honor of Ireland's patron saint. A large and varied program is being arranged, in which many local boys and girls will take part.

Included in the program will be—"Irish Melodies," by Geraldine Meniccucci, Florence Arata, Alice Cunio, Hilda Nelsson, Veronica Christian, Catherine Henry, Mary Agnes McGuinn, Patricia Murphy; "Topsy Turvy," by Richard Harmon, Lawrence Forest, Walter Chreisten, Kevin Barry, Raymond Eade, Bernard McDermott; Irsh Jigs, by Ann Frances McGuinn; Sailors' Hornpipe by Patricia Murray.

Afterwards a dance will be held, which will be free of charge. A four-piece orchestra will furnish the music for the dance. An admission of 25c will be charged and ten cents for children. All the friends of the parish are invited to the party and participation in a good time which is assured to all.

PRETTY GIRL IN PANTS PICKED UP BY POLICE

A young woman who told police that she had "run away from her husband" was booked at Daly City jail last Tuesday night and was turned over to Sheriff James J. McGrath for questioning.

She gave the name of Mrs. Wanda George, 19. When accosted on the El Camino Real near the southern outskirts of Colma she was wearing man's clothing, according to the report of Officer Joseph Kusber.

CITY ELECTION TO BE HELD APRIL 9

At a regular meeting of the City Council, held at the City Hall last Monday evening, a resolution was passed calling an election to be held on April 9, when four City Councilmen will be elcted.

The election officers will be those who served at the election held on January 19.

The clerk was instructed to communicate with Supervisor A. Witt, inviting him to be present at an adjourned meeting of the Council to be held next Tuesday evening, March 6, at which time matters of county-wide interest will be taken up.

POPULAR COUPLE MARRIED AT GRACE UNITED CHURCH

On last Saturday evening at 8 o'clock, Miss Eva Johnson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, of Westlake avenue, became the bride of Earl Roy Clark, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clark, of Homestead street, San Francisco. The ceremony took place at Grace United church on Twenty-first and Capp streets, San Francisco. The bride was beautifully gowned in ivory satin, with a tulle veil, ornamented with orange blossoms, and carried a shower bouquet of white roses, freezias and lilies of the valley. Miss Florence Manuels, of Redwood City, as maid of honor, was prettily gowned in yellow satin with hat to match and carried pink rose buds. Miss Beatrice Clark, sister of the groom, was the bridesmaid and wore blue satin with matching hat and also carried pink rose buds. The best man was Edward Thomas, a cousin of the groom, and the ushers were Frank Fuller and Frank Leary.

After the ceremony about forty relatives and friends gathered at the home of the bride's parents on Westlake avenue, where a reception and dinner was held for the happy couple. Dancing and cards were enjoyed during the remained of the evening.

Miss Clark was born in Daly City, where she attended school and graduated from Jefferson Union high school.

The many friends of the young couple wish them much happiness during their married life and are happy to learn they will make their home on Woodrow street.

Womans' Home Club Members Enjoy Whist

Mrs. Lillian Landini, of Winchester street, entertained the Women's Home Club, Tuesday afternoon, at a whist party. The following ladies were present: Mesdames I. Thiel, R. Tucker, F. Aveson, Fulmer, M. Boyle, Alice Peterson, Backer, Clay, Davies, Grantham, Eason, Moresco, Mathias, Marken, Walsh, Twesten, Junker, Goggin, Edith Ferguson, Stella Jensen, M. May, A. Parmisano, Julia Sturla, C. Michelsen, M. Dunbar, S. F. Chase, Anna Zulk, L. Jost, E. Vallarina, H. H. Smith, A. Prescott, Louise Canine, Anita Wright, Foregano, Colmers, Crane, Loughlin, Aleda Canine, T. Schmidt, Schumacher, Cisenhut, Woodside, Miller, K. Fellman, I. Yates, Hedvall, Maxwell, Greene and Miss Moore.

Lawndale Councilman Aswers Final Summons

Joseph Lagomarsino, a pioneer nurseryman, died at his home last Sunday, following an illness of nearly a year's duration. Mr. Lagomarsino was a member of the Lawndale city council, but his illness prevented him from being active for several months past. He was 56 years of age and was a native of Nevada. He is survived by his widow, Della, three sons, Edward, Albert and Lloyd, and a daughter, Doris, all of Lawndale. Other relatives who survive him are Bert Lagomarsino, a brother, and his sisters Mrs. Louise Armonio, Mrs. Katherine Komsthoeft, and Mrs. Irene Baciocco. The funeral services took place from the chapel of Valente, Marini, Perata & Co., interment being at Cypress Lawn Catacombs.

TWO INJURED IN AUTO CRASH

Two persons were injured, one seriously, in an automobile accident on the Junipero Serra boulevard, at the county line in Colma, last Tuesday afternoon. Wilson Addicott, 501 Baden avenue, South San Francisco, was treated at the Villa Sanitarium for cuts and bruises and possible internal injuries, and Mrs. A. C. Showell, 506 Twentieth avenue, San Francisco, for lacerations of the face. Abbott was riding with John Docker, of Colma, when the latter's automobile collided with one driveu by Mrs. Showell. Both cars had to be towed to near by garages.

CALIFORNIA MUST HAVE "BIG RACE"

By J. W. MARCHBANK

With interest in racing at a high pitch, in many sectors, the subject of a fair deduction from the pari mutuel pools for the state and for the association giving the sport is more pertinent than ever. California, it can be pointed out, is not jealous of any other commonwealth as a pleasure ground, in fact, fair-minded citizens in our midst repeatedly express themselves as heartened by the success of race meetings elsewhere.

All stand or fall together.

Charles E. Brossman, in his column in The Thoroughbred Record, says:

"The noted winter resorts of Southern Europe have nothing on the climate and surroundings of Florida and California. If the European countries refuse to pay their obligations to the United States why not develop our own winter resorts to the highest degree and keep the tourists' money at home under the Stars and Stripes where it belongs."

Mr. Brossman, well remembered as the trainer of the black whirlwind Imp, must have been thinking primarily of Florida when he limited the appeal of American recreational centers to "winter." Florida's season is short, in fact, as it is confined for the most part to the early months of the year; California offers out-door sport thrills the year round.

I advocate the staging of a race here that would gain world-wide fame both on account of the class of the field going to the post and by reason of its mammoth monetary proportions. Under my plan the purse for the memorable contest would come from one and one-half per cent of the betting pools of the spring and fall periods of the sport; one and one-half per cent also would be subtracted from the pools for the state and six per cent for the association, making a commission of nine per cent in all, a fair "take" from any point of view.

Tourists by the thousands would be attracted by the great race.

AMERICAN LEGION AUXILIARY NOTES

Daly City Unit No. 410 held its regular meeting on Wednesday evening, February 21. Members of the Post were invited guests. A large class of candidates were initiated into the American Legion Auxiliary. Entertainment was furnished by the Hoffschneider Dancing School.

This month marks our third birthday. A celebration is being planned for our regual social night. Don't miss a grand time.

A sewing club is being formed, to meet every Monday afternoon at 1:30 to sew for our adopted family and for veterans at Livermore hospital. Next Monday the members will meet at the home of President June Craft 233 Willits street. All members are invited to be present and help.

On Sunday evening, February 25, our colors and several members attended the patriotic services at the First Congregational church in San Francisco.

A large delegation attended the annual Veterans' Fete and Washington celebration held in the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco last Thursday evening. Our own celebration was held on Wednesday evening.

On Monday evening, February 26, an Americanism program was given by George Washington Unit No. 114 in the War Memorial Veterans' building. Mrs. Carrie T. Baade, Department chairman, was the speaker of the evening. Several members from this Unit attended.

On Thursday evening, March 1, San Bruno Unit No. 411 will dedicate their new colors. The charter is also to be presented to the Sons of the Legion.

The San Mateo County Council of the American Legion Auixliary will hold its regular meeting on Monday evening, March 5, in the Burlingame Legion Hall.

All members should be sure to attend our next regular meeting, to be held on Wednesday evening, March 7, at 8:30. G. J. H.

POPULAR COUPLE MARRIED

Miss Bertha Willett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Willett, of Sevill street, San Francisco, became the bride of Harold Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson, of Westlake avenue, on Thursday noon of last week at Geneva avenue M. E. church, Rev. Carpenter officiating. The pretty bride was beautifully gowned in white satin, wearing a tulle veil and carrying a shower bouquet of gardenias, freezias and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Clyde Vollmer, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. She was gowned in blue silk and carried pink roses. Miss Betty Zwicker, cousin of tthe bride, gowned in pink silk and carrying delphineae, was bridesmaid. Ralph Johnson was his brother's best man. The ushers were Roy Charles and A. Schiller. After the services a breakfast and reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Seville street, San Francisco. The young couple left on a short trip, returning on Saturday to attend tthe wedding of the groom's sister, Miss Eva Johnson, after which they left for a honeymoon trip to Yosemite Valley, and upon their return they will reside in the Ingleside district in San Francisco.

Local Woman Hit-Run Victim

Mrs. S. Perada, 46, of 356 Willits street, was found lying on Hillcrest Drive, Daly City, last Sunday night, by Officer W. Sunderland. She was removed to the Villa Sanitarium, where she was treated for cuts and bruises and held for observation. She had been run down by a hit-run autoist.

Girl Bitten by Dog

Vivian Tanner, 8-year-old daughter of Mrs. Helen Tanner, of Burlingame, is suffering from a lacerated wrist, received when she was bitten by a dog with which she was playing.

PLANS FUND FOR WELFARE WORK

J. W. Marchbank, director general of Tanforan, announced today that, following informal conferences with the members of the California Horse Racing board in regard to the urgent necessity of opportunities for raising funds for welfare work, he would make a formal application to the governing body of racing for permission for Tanforan to race on Sunday, April 8.

It is planned that money set aside by the Tanforan management for charity in San Mateo county will be known as the San Mateo County Welfare Fund. In any case where the portion of the gate receipts to be given to charity does not amount to $2,000, the Tanforan managment will make up the difference.

The board of supervisors of San Mateo county will be the advisory committee to the track management for the disposition of the funds in San Mateo county, due to the fact that the supervisors are in closest touch with the needs of their particular districts, and are therefore best fitted to act as a clearing house for relief.

Through the successful afternoons of sport in other seasons, racing for charity on a Sunday has become almost an institution of Tanforan, and with a new period of the pastime soon to open, charitably inclined citizens are wondering as to its return and speaking heartily on all sides in its favor.

The races at Tanforan will begin Thursday, March 29. There is great interest among the fans in the return of the thoroughbred.

SILVER STEADILY GAINING STRENGTH

By J. W. MARCHBANK
Pioneer in Frontier Mining Work.

That far-sighted citizen of British Columbia, Robert Cromie, owner and publisher of the Vancouver Sun, was recently interviewed by B. C. Forbes, noted financial writer, and the ideas the newspaperman set forth are certainly worthy of deep consideration. It can easily be gathered from the tone of Mr. Cromie's remarks that he is mightily impressed by the policies of President Roosevelt, just as I have been all along since the New Deal began to function.

After pointing out that Canada and the United States are essentially an economic unity, the northern publisher made the assertion, in which I heartily concur, that minerals are taking on new life in Canada, especially gold and silver. That is a contention I have been attempting to drive home these many months in the columns of this journal. And going along with the Canadian upswing are California, Washington, Idaho, Montana, and other states of the West.

Silver is getting a lot of attention at Washington these days, and before long I predict action that will make it worth while for development of properties that will bring a handsome return to miners of the white metal. The President has the legal power to devalue the silver dollar as he did the gold dollar and when, if that comes to pass, there will be tremendous expansion in silver mining.

* * *

Wallace J. Laut, editor of "Gold", the breezy publication that comes out of Toronto each month, once in awhile gives some space to something besides the yellow metal itself. He is of the opinion that silver revaluation is close at hand and that Canada will benefit in isolated properties, also in Great Bear Lake and in large base metal mines with a silver content in their ore. He believes base metal activity is certain on a steady rather than a boom basis. From the broadest point of view Editor Laut opines Canada is a country with most of its history ahead of it, a clever way, indeed, to put the situation.

* * *

Getting back to gold, Mr. Laut's article in the February issue of his magazine entitled "Twenty-five Millions in New Gold—Canada's Biggest Prize in 1934", should be read by every wide awake citizen interested in that basic industry, mining. A forceful paragraph in a "story" scintillating in all parts follows:

"Do you, Mr. Reader, conjure up the Canadian mining picture on looking over the 'background stuff'? Can you dismiss from your mind all of the old prejudices regarding mining, and study the situation as a Canadian about to help take hold on the rope that will do more to send Canada sailing ahead, to fulfill her economic destiny than any other influence?"

In his survey the editor confidently predicts the present year will be the greatest Canada has ever had in gold mining. He makes an estimate of the production at $110,000,000 and perhaps much more. He calls attention to the prediction of Dr. Andrew Lawson, geologist, that Canada will lead the world, passing Africa, within measurable time.

Properties in the southern part of Bridge River are expected by mining men to come into prominence this spring and summer, with news of an important nature to be made soon.

The Alaska Weekly tells of a report by the Canadian department of mines to the effect that the Klondike, once Canada's leading producer of gold, has many years active production ahead of it. Summarizing the reserves, the report shows a total of all classes of reserves of placer gravel of 286,000,000 cubic yards, containing a total value of $54,500,000 in gold.

On returning from an extensive examination of the underground workings of Richfield Cariboo Gold Mines, consulting engineer M. M. Reese was highly enthused over the manner in which the development work had borne out his predictions based on surface showings and a study of the general geology of the Cariboo.

January Beverage Tax is $75,975

The state tax on beer and wine showed an increase for January over December, a total of $75,975 in revenue being collected from this source last month, R. E. Collins, chairman of the State Board of Equalization, announces. December collections were $66,942. Of the total receipts for January, 77 per cent represented beer distributions, and 23 per cent was wine. California breweries distributed 90 per cent of the total beer distributions.

AMERICAN LEGION NOTES OF INTEREST

The San Mateo County Council of the American Legion will meet in the Burlingame American Legion Hall tonight, March 2.

The Eighth District is now in Twelfth place in the department. With the Posts of the district attaining their membership quotas and the organization of new Posts, the district will soon be in first place again at the San Francisco convention.

The latest Post organized is Bay View, with headquarters at 5154 Third street, San Francisco. They are making plans for a public initiation and installation ceremony, by the Eighth District ritualistic team, to be held soon. Three other new Posts are being organized in San Francisco.

Daly City Post No. 410 wishes to advise the merchants and citizens of Daly City that there are only three nationally recognized sales of flowers, cards, etc., by veterans: The American Legion "Memorial" and Veterans of Foreign Wars "Buddie" Poppy sales, in May, and the Disabled American Veterans' "Forget-me-not Sale," in December. All money collected from these sales is spent for relief work in the community where the sale is held. All other sales are made by promoters for their own personal interests.

The public will be informed of any legitimate sale through the columns of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion. L. M. H.

OLD GLORY POST AUXILIARY NOTES

The George Washington fete held in the Civic Auditorum, San Francisco, on February 22, was very well attended by our Post and Auxiliary, as well as all other veteran organizations. Those who were fortunate enough to be there enjoyed a fine show and pageant. The Chronicle and committees responsible for this gala affair announced that the show was a huge success and hope to make it an annual celebration.

Last Friday night, three San Mateo Auxiliaries were officially visited as a group by President of the Department of California and Nevada, Phoebe Neron. Old Glory as the hostess Auxiliary, opened the meeting escorting Department President Neron, Senior Department Vice-President Hubbard, Department Chaplain Donohue, National Council Administration Member Schertle, Department Chief of Staff Leffman, and Past President Blesh to their seats of honor.

Tanforan Auxiliary proceeded with the balloting and initiation and Matalan performed the closing ceremony. Refreshments were served in the dining room of the Masonic Hall. The tables were colorfully decorated in honor of George Washington. When all the National and Departmental officesr were seated at their table, President Elsie Ireton presented the guest of honor with a chest of silver coins as a gift from the three Auxiliaries represented. E. D.

MRS. LANDINI HOSTESS AT MARTHA WASHINGTON PARTY

On Tuesday evening of last week Mrs. Lillian Landini, of Winchester street, entertained a large group of friends at a Martha Washington party, many of the guests coming in costume. The evening was spent in playing cards, after which dainty refreshments were served in the social hall.

Those who enjoyed the delightful evening were: Maude Hanselman, Gertrude Gehringer, Helen Grantham, Agnes Prescott, Martha Wegner, Lottie Supton, Helen Peck, Dollie Roberts, Amy Yates, Mazie Boyle, Catherine Wight, Blanche Rollins, Louise T. Cook, Madeleine Fellows, Marie Andersen, Eva Page, Mable McNally, Marguerite Woodside, Mary Friman, Arlene Broska, Grace L. Augustien, Cassie Reinhart, Julia Byrne, Dorothy Garibaldi, Mabel Martinelli, Bertha MacCarthy, Anna M. Eason and Emily Urton.

Renew Annexation Move

San Mateo county again faces revival of efforts of the city of San Francisco to annex the entire Peninsula. San Francisco supervisors at their meeting last Monday reopened the discussion which was abandoned five years ago following a comprehensive study and campaign carried on by the San Francisco chamber of commerce.

Death Claims Clubman

Stephen T. Britten, 74, of Burlingame, retired capitalist, clubman and member of a prominent and wealthy Peninsula family, died shortly after 9 o'clock Monday morning at a private sanitorium, 1438 Floribunda road, following a period of declining health.

DALY CITY NOTES

Mrs. K. Nocton, of Irvington street, spent last Sunday in Palo Alto.

Mrs. F. B. McDermott, of Templeton avenue, and Mrs. J. E. Walker spent last Saturday visiting with Mrs. Myron Alexander in Oakland.

Mrs. Ione Delgardo, of Honolulu, is spending the winter as the guest of her sister, Mrs. Justin Warner, of Templeton avenue.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Hansen, of Irvington street, accompanied by Mrs. D. Kraus, motored to Corte Madera last Saturday and spent the week end as the house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Larry Cole.

Mrs. A. W. Sadler, of Risel street, motored to Sunnyvale air base last Monday, accompanied by her cousins who are visiting here from Provo and Grantsville, Utah. After viewing the Macon they spent the day with friends at Mountain View.

Mrs. H. A. McHugh, of Oliver street, and Mrs. J. Carr, of San Francisco, visited Mrs. W. Bock, of 81 Cavour street, in Mills Memorial hospital last Monday, where Mrs. Bock underwent an operation. Mrs. Bock is getting along very nicely and hopes to be home next week.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Koch, of Peoria street, entertained a group of relatives and friends last Friday night at a birthday dinner in honor of Mrs. Koch's birthday. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Charles Verbrugge, Cecilia Verbrugge, William Verbrugge, Miss Valentine Moorehouse, Mrs. Margaret McCarthy, and Phillip Bolger.

Mrs. G. Harding, of Bellevue avenue, gave a surprise birthday party for Paul Fenetti, of Bellevue avenue, last Saturday afternoon in her home, which was artistically decorated for the occasion. A large decorated birthday cake was the table centerpiece. The honored guest received many lovely gifts from his many friends. There were twenty-four of Paul's friends present to enjoy this delightful affair with him.

Anne Lowry, little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lowry, of Risel street, is in Lane hospital where she underwent an operation for the removal of a double mastoid. The little patient recently had the measles and complications set in. She was removed to the hospital, where she was operated on. Wednesday of last week. Her many little friends are anxiously awaiting her return to school.

JEFFERSON UNION HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

(By the Class in Journalism.)

A Washington Day assembly was called last Wednesday. Mr. Ferguson discussed briefly the character of George Washington, and emphasized his abilities as a statesman and a soldier. "Few soldiers are statesmen and few statesmen are soldiers," said Mr. Ferguson, but "George Washhington possessed the rare combination of genius in both these fields."

Mr. Ferguson introduced Mr. Beswick, Commissioner of Vocational Education of the State Department of Education, who delivered an interesting address on the value of vocational training. Mr. Beswick emphasized particularly the value of vocational guidance and training as a preparation for life after graduation from high school.

He gave his opinion on several problems presented to him by Mr. Ferguson on behalf of the students, and added wholesome advice based upon his personal experience in the world of industry as well as the field of education. His advice seemed to be taken seriously, for a number of the students sought personal interviews with him after the assembly.

At the last student body meeting Mr. Ferguson asked the students to help protect the shrubs and trees on the high school grounds. Every once in awhile an epidemic of vandalism seems to break loose. Now some one in the community is taking delight in entering the school grounds after school hours and at week ends and destroying plants and shrubs and doing other damage. Rows of stakes that were put in beside shrubs to cause them to grow straight have been pulled out and carried away. Some have been broken and the pieces thrown around, showing wanton destruction. One of the beautiful palms that was transplanted recently has been destroyed. Mr. Ferguson states that the high school grounds belong to the public, and that every citizen in the community owns an interest in them. So it is with the high school property in general. It is, therefore, the duty of every citizen to see that the building and grounds of the high school, including the plants and shrubs and trees, are protected against vandalism. A liberal reward will be given by the trustees to anyone giving information which will cause the arrest and conviction of the guilty parties.

Members of the Physics branch of the Science Club were entertained recently by two science programs. The first was held last week. A motion picture on the gasoline engine was shown. Here was recorded the history of one of our most common forms of power, from its beginning in a steel yard to the finished product.

The second program was held Monday and was sponsored by the Pacific Gas and Electric Company. Mr. E. M. Seel, publicity manager for the company, gave a talk on hydro-electric power. His lecture was illustrated by slides and a motion picture on the building of a dam on the Mokelumne river.

Richard Spencer, physics club president, informed the members that a trip to one of the P. G. & E. generating stations had been planned.

Last Wednesday evening the C. C. Club sponsored a dance held in the school auditorium, with many of the students and alumni present. Among those present were: Harriet Anderson, Katherine Hurlbut, Catherine McKeown, Esther Franklin, Laura Andedson Lyla Crane, Evelyn Hammer, May Swan, Frances Lane, Peggy Vincent, Junior Doyle, Leo Becker, Robert Stone, James Swan, Earl Bobbitt, Hugh Smith, Evelyn Hanschen, Pete Markovich, Maxine Slaught, Florence Rancatore, Evelyn Clark, Jerry Harper, John Ambrosio, Mildred and Herman Kalinin, Slvador Guerrero, Evelyn Rancatore, Eddie Dennis, Eleanor Bodien and Walter Davis. The auditorium was decorated in purple and gold, and on each bracket lamp hung a Chinese lantern. The music by St. John's orchestra made the dance very enjoyable to everyone.

Final Plans Made for Whist

Final preparations are being made for the monster whist on March 17, given by the Voters' League. Tickets can be obtained from Mrs. Witt or Mr. Ed Cavagnaro.

Mr. Jack Fahey spent last Sunday across the bay visiting friends.

The infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Adams, of Irvington street, was baptized at Our Lady of Perpetual church last Sunday. She was given the nuame of Patricia Dolores. Mr. and Mrs. Roy Kelly, of Brunswick street, were sponsors.

On Friday evening, March 2, at the regular meeting of the League, many important subjects are to be discussed. A large crowd has signified its intention of being present.

Mr. Roy Kelly, of Brunswick street, has accepted a good position in Los Angeles.

Miss Lucy Fahey, of Irvington street, is now wearing the graduating ring of Mercy Academy in Burlingame.

MINING NOTES

Properties in the southern part of Bridge River are expected by mining men to come into considerable prominence this spring and summer, with operations on the Dan Tucker, Red Hawk, Standard, Butte- I. X. L., and others in that section, giving encouraging results, says the Vancouver Sun. News of a very important nature is expected from that part of the Bridge River formation within the near future.

Gold mountain property is ready for the driving of the main working tunnel on No. 2 level of the Maple Lear vein, according to the weekly progress report from the mine, says the Vancouver Sun. Drilling in the rock can start at once and the road has been continued to the new tunnel site, while the compressor and other equipment have been moved to this point.

Gold was discovered in Georgia more than 100 years ago. Between 1830 and 1893 about $16,000,000 worth of gold was taken from that state. Since then there has been little of this mining in Georgia.

Company officials announced last week that plans for installing the machinery in the Home Gold mill are complete and the work should be completed within a few weeks. Home Gold will then be added to the producers of British Columbia.

Gold mining properties on Mineral Hill, Vancouver Island, operated from 1895 to 1898 and then abandoned, will be brought into production again shortly by Vancouver Island Gold Mines, Limited, a company composed of leading Vancouver business men.

A resolution asking that all crown-granted mineral claims which have reverted to the crown for non-payment of taxes be thrown open for relocation under the Mineral Act was passed at the annual meeting of the Omineca branch, British Columbia Chamber of Mines.

Herbert Taylor, of Lillooet, has completed arrangements for a strong organized company to develop the Taylor Windfall property in the Whitewater district of British Columbia. It is reported that prominent Victoria and Vancouver interests are sponsoring the undertaking.

British Columbia, with a normal production of some 10,000,000 ounces of silver annually, is vitally interested in the rise of silver. Recent increases accompanied rumors of new silver action at Washington which it is reported may take silver up well over $1 an ounce by spring.

Samples of ore, just received from the property of Hercules Consolidated Mining, Smelting & Power Corporation Limited, at Phillips Arm, taken over a width of four and one-half feet, ran 2.99 ounces of gold, according to Charles Brennan, secretary of the company.

Hon. Charles McCrea, Ontario's popular and efficient minister of mines, in an interview granted the Vancouver Sun, said: "Thirty-five dollar gold means a new era for gold mining throughout Canada, and in the resultant impetus to all classes of business. British Columbia, the pioneer mining province of the west, should reap great benefits. The new price of $35 will not only enhance the value of Canadian known ore reserves by 75 per cent, but will also greatly increase our resources of mineable gold. Lower grade sections of present producers hitherto worthless will be brought into profitable play, and many new deposits will be made available."

DIVIDING A HERD

This story of dividing a herd of cows is not new, but it may interest those who have not heard it. Anyway, it is a neat problem in trick mathematics.

A farmer died possessed of a herd of seventeen cows, of which he willed his wife one-half, his son one-third, and his daughter one-ninth. The executor of the will was staumped, but called a mathematical shark to his aid, with this happy result:

A cow was borrowed from a neighbor, making eighteen. The widow was given nine, which was one-half; the son got six, which was one-third; then the daughter received two, or one-ninth. This totaled seventeen, the number to be divided, while the borrowed cow was left. She was returned to her owner, and everybody was satisfied.

A new weather observatory has been erected on the summit of Uspallata Pass, 12,500 feet up in the Andes mountains.

Weighing only slightly more than two pounds, a compressed-air turbine motor for high-speed operation has been developed.

All citizens of Daly City who are interested in the continuance of the present good government of Daly City are invited to attend a meeting to be held in the Daly City Auditorium next Wednesday evening, March 7, 1934.

COUNTY HEALTH NEWS

Note—This is a weekly report from the San Mateo County Department of Public Health and Welfare, giving facts of importance for health protection, and a list of contagious diseases reported to the County Health Officer in the previous week.

Protection Against Influenza

Although, as we stated last week, there is no absolute protection against influenza, proper care will largely prevent individual complications and spread in institutions. During the world-wide epidemic, or pandemic, of 1889-1890, several large prisons escaped infection entirely by means of strict quarantine. Persons known to be in delicate health should be carefully kept away from crowds and from sick people during epidemics. The alleged value of many drugs for preventing or curing infection is a delusion. For example, recent researches at the University of Minnesota on the effects of aspirin and of baking soda on feverish colds showed no such value for either.

Bed Rest Versus Sprays and Gargles

The following is quoted from the "Weekly Bulletin," California Department of Public Health, December 10, 1932, because it shows how strongly our highest authority stresses the importance of rest in bed as compared with the worthlessness of medications of any kind:

"The danger in an illness from influenza lies in complications that ensue. Individuals die of pneumonia associated with influenza, but they seldom die of influenza itself. The most important procedure for a person who suffers from this disease is to go to bed immediately when the first symptoms of illness appear, and remain there until after the fever has completely disappeared. The highest authorities agree that this single measure is of greater value in controlling the spread of influenza, as well as in preventing the development of complications, than any other single measure that might be adopted. The following suggestions are offered to individauls who may contract influenza:

"1. If you feel a sudden chill, followed by muscular pain, headache, backache, unusual tiredness and fever, go to bed without delay. Call a physician at once.

"2. Protect others by sneezing and coughing into handkerchiefs or cloths, which should be boiled or burned.

"3. Stay in bed until the physician tells you that it is safe for you to get up.

"In order to prevent influenza there is no procedure known that is of greater value than the maintenance of normal health. Careful attention should be paid to personal hygiene, following explicitly all of the simple well known rules for the maintenance of good physical condition. The use of gargles, sprays, or other medications, for the purpose of preventing the contraction of disease, is not recommended."

SURPRISE BIRTHDAY PARTY

A group of friends gathered at the home of Mrs. and Mrs. Richard J. Ennis, of Irvington street, last Tuesday night, and gave him a surprise party on his birthday. Mr. and Mrs. Ennis were dinner guests of his mother that night. The guests all gathered at the Ennis home, which was decorated in George Washington colors and with balloons, while the honored guest was still at the home of his mother. About twenty-five guests enjoyed a very pleasant evening of dancing. At a late hour a delicious buffet supper was served. The guests included Mrs. Anna Kennedy, Mrs. Susan Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Hampton, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Miller, Misses Weltha Guiles, Florence Pettis, Frances Pettis, Edith Lewis, Ellen Kennedy and Gertrude Kennedy, and Messrs. Charles Lusterdn, Richard Sullivan, Bill Roberts, Clarence Bond, Bill Kennedy and Bill Lewis.

The following members of Court St. Mary No. 1155, Catholic Daughters of America, attended the class initiation at Court Mission No. 865, in San Francisco, last Wednesday evening: Past Grand Regent Mrs. Margaret Fields, Mrs. A. Peterson, Mrs. K. Nocton, Mrs. K. Phelan, Mrs. Ethel Bolger, Mrs. A. Denning, and Mrs. Ida Forrest.

CALIFORNIA SCHOOLS

By Roy W. Cloud, State Executive Secretary California Teachers' Association.

Teacher Training

The earliest teachers in California were men and women from other states, usually seeking wealth rather than teaching positions. Many of these, like John Swett, were of the highest personnel character, and of advanced professional training. And other were by no means so well prepared professionally or so fitted personally for places in the school room.

Prior to 1860 individuals were elected by boards of school trustees as teachers at the will of the trustes, no examination or certification being necessary. In 1860 the state superintendent was authorized to appoint a state board of examiners with power to examine teachers and to issue certificates good for two years. At the same sesison of the legislature, county school superintendents were authorized to appoint county boards of examination with power to issue certificates good for one year.

A year later the state superintendent reported that the changes in the law relating to teachers' examinations were "driving the quacks out of the teaching profession."

The improvement of teachers was apparently a primary concern to State Superintendent Andrew J. Moulder. As early as 1858 he had recommended that county boards of examination should be established. The next year he asked for an appropriation, to cover the expenses of holding a state institute for teachers. In 1860 this request was granted, the appropriation being $5,000.

In 1861 Mr. Moulder asked for an appropriation of $5,000 to establish a state normal school for the training of teachers. The legislature of 1862 granted an appropriation of $3,000 for this purpose and the normal school was established in San Francisco in that year. Later in 1871, this normal school was removed to San Jose.

With the growth of the elementary schools, and the increasing demand for trained teachers, other normal schools were established, two before 1890; Los Angeles Normal in 1882, and Chico Normal in 1889. The Los Angeles Normal was later converted into the University of California at Los Angeles. Meanwhile, additional state normal schools, better known as State Teacher Colleges, have been established at San Diego, at San Francisco, at Santa Barbara, at Fresno, and at Arcata.

In 1867, State Superintendent Swett reported as follows:

"California is the only state in the Union in which teachers have gained legal rights to be examined erclusively by members of their own profession. This has relieved teachers of useless annoyance and humiliation; it has increased their self-respect, stimulated their ambition, and guarded the school against quacks and pretenders."

Teacher training in California is entrusted primarily to these seven teacher colleges; to the University of California at Berkeley and the University of California at Los Angeles; and to ten privately endowed colleges and universities and seven special schools offering training leading to recommendation for various types of credentials. The credentials, issued by the institutions and the state department of education, are recorded and countersigned in the state office and serve as a basis for certification in the various counties of the state.

The requirements in California for teacher credentials are high, among the highest in the United States. Elementary and secondary certificates require the equivalent of a college bachelor's degree and one years' post graduate work. Junior college credentials require in addition the Master of Arts or the Doctor of Philosophy degree.

California's toal teaching personnel, iincluding regular day teachers, night school teachers and those engaged in part time teaching, is 46,804, caring for an enrollment in all public school branches, excluding the State University, of 1,485,443.

SUNRISE EASTER CROSS TO BE DEDICATED SUNDAY

On Sunday, March 4, at 3 P. M., San Francisco will dedicate its new reinforced concrete Sunrise Easter Cross, the highest cross in the world, on Mount Davidson, the highest point in San Francisco.

Clarence F. (Sandy) Pratt, chairman of the citizens' committee on arrangements, states that the cross is 103 feet high and stands on a circular platform 67 feet in diameter. The arms are 39 feet from tip to tip. When the twelfth annual Easter service is held on April 1, the new cross will be the best lighted outdoor structure in the world.

Be prepared to attend the largest whist ever held on the Peninsula at Redwood City Legion Hall, Warren and Standish streets, Redwood City. A whist party that you will never forget, given under the auspices of the San Mateo County Council, American Legion, March 24. Playoff at 8:30 sharp. L. M. H.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION BY EL CARMELO PARLOR

El Carmelo Parlor No. 181, N. D. G. W., celebrated its twenty-fourth anniversary with a dinner held at the Native Daughter Home, 555 Baker street, San Francisco, on Tuesday evening, February 28. Thirty-eight members and their friends were in attendance and had a most enjoyable time.

The distinguished guest of honor was Grand President Irma W. Laird, of Alturas, this being the first time it has been possible for a Grand President to attend the Parlor's annual celebration.

The other guests of the Parlor were Grand Outside Sentinel Alice Oldham, Supervising District Deputy Rena Mathias, Deputy Mona Thiesen, of Yosemite Parlor, and the organizer of the Parlor, Mrs. Pauline Quinto, of Amapola Parlor.

The tables were decorated with the colors of the order, red, white and yellow, with a pansy corsage at each place. A lovely large birthday cake, made by Rena Mathias, was in the center of the speakers' table.

A feature of the evening was the presenting of magazines to Mrs. Laura Hawkins, hostess of the Home. The Parlor plans on keeping the Home family supplied with the current issue of magazines by taking them to the Home each month after they finish reading them.

Mrs. Louise Eliasen, president of the Parlor, presided as toastmistress, and introduced the various guests. After the dinner, several of the members attended the official visit of Las Lomas Parlor, while the other members went to the home of Mrs. Florence Hopman, chairman of the affair, for a game of cards.

Mr. and Mrs. A. McHugh and children, of Oliver street, enjoyed a very pleasant afternoon and dinner last Sunday at the home of Mrs. Mary Linkros, of Army street, San Francisco, other guests being Mrs. C. Elliott, Mrs. McHugh's mother, Mrs. C. Duff, also of San Francisco, and Jack McCarthy, of Alameda.

It is said that married men have fewer automobile accidents. Perhaps because of so much good advice from the back seat.

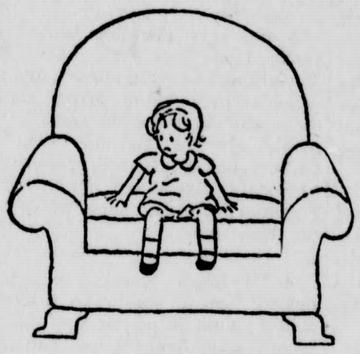
ARM CHAIRS

I DON'T see why I couldn't have
A great big cushion chair
There's none in all this house for me—
There's not one anywhere.



There's Grampa's chair and Gramma's chair
And one for Pa and Ma—
A chair for everybody else
No matter who they are.

There's one that I'm supposed to use
But it's a tiny chair—
It isn't soft or anything,
And I don't think it's fair!

SUNDAY SUPPER AROUND THE FIRE

Some Dishes That Will Add to Enjoyment.

By EDITH M BARBER

"DO COME to supper Sunday night," is an invitation which is usually received with delight because that is one meal of the week where informality and delicious food should be and usually are mixed in just the right order.

In some households Sunday night supper is served in the living room and where there are plenty of comfortable chairs, and tables where cups and plates may be rested. This is a most pleasant institution especially if the meal centers around a snapping wood fire.

The food for such a meal must be simple and easy to serve. Food that can be arranged on a tea-cart or on an extra size tray in the kitchen and brought into the living room in one or possibly two installments. If there is an electric grill or toaster that can be attached in the living room, the hot toast may be made by a privileged guest.

A variety of sandwiches—not too dainty, if there are to be men or women with appetites to satisfy, may be served. A salad may be passed with the sandwiches or toast and, of course, there will be a hot drink. Unless you are certain of the tastes of your guests, it is best to have a choice.

Sometimes a scalloped or creamed dish, such as shrimp au gratin or chicken a la king will be the main features. Pickles and olives and jelly or marmalade will add flavor and interest.

Dessert may be a fruit jelly, a Bavarian cream, an ice cream with perhaps a special sauce of some kind. The Brownies a la mode make a good dessert to follow a simple first course.

Two-in-One Tea Cake Recipe.

2 cups pastry flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
½ cup butter
½ teaspoon lemon extract
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
½ cup milk
½ teaspoon vanilla

Sift the baking powder with the flour. Cream the shortening, beat in the sugar gradually, then the beaten eggs and flavoring. Add the dry ingredients alternately with the milk. Beat two minutes.

Divide the batter in half. To one-half add ¼ cup chopped nut meats and to the remainder an equal amount of sliced candied orange or grapefruit peel. Both nuts and peel should be dredged lightly with flour.

Bake the cakes in small tea cake pans in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.) for about 20 minutes.

Cover with frosting when cool.

This recipe makes two dozen cakes

Two-in-One Frosting

2 egg yolks
Few grains salt
1 pound package confectioners sugar or 2⅔ cups.

Beat the egg yolks, add the salt, and stir in as much sugar as possible. Divide the frosting into halves. To one-half add one tablespoon cocoa and ¼ teaspoon vanilla and one tablespoon coffee. To the second half add one tablespoon orange juice. Add more sugar to each frosting if the mixture is not stiff enough to spread.

Tomato Shrimp Jelly.

2 cans tomato soup
1 can boiling water
2 tablespoons gelatin
¼ cup cold water
½ pound shrimps
12 stuffed olives

Heat the soup with the boiling water. Soften the gelatin in the cold water, add the soup, stir until dissolved. Arrange several shrimps to use alternately in a mold and add carefully a little of the gelatin mixture. Place on ice to harden and repeat. A ring mold is attractive when it is turned out—and then the center can be filled with sliced cucumber mixed with whipped sour cream seasoned with onion and tarragon vinegar. When the mold is set, turn out on a platter and garnish with lettuce or romaine. Pass the sour cream dressing or mayonnaise.

Bronx Cheer Brings Man Hard Sentence

Aberdeen, Wash.—Police Judge R. E. Taggart heard evidence indicating I. A. Ryals, Aberdeen, was drunk when arrested recently and fined the man $15.

Ryals tossed back his head and issued a robust Bronx cheer. Angered, the judge added 10 days in jail. Again Ryals gave the salute. The judge increased the sentence to 30 days.

Ryals Bronx-cheered again. The sentence went to 60 days. The jailer hauled him out of the courtroom before he could sputter himself into jail for a longer period.

How It Started

Wearing Earrings

THE custom of wearing earrings seems to have enjoyed a sort of recrudescence. However, wearing earrings today and wearing them in other years are two different matters. Today, they are simply fastened on, while formerly, the ears had to be pierced—a practice which is a sort of survival of the barbarous rite in the course of which the human body would be disfigured for the gratification of vanity and display—a custom which is growing more and more rare among civilized peoples with the passage of time.

However, earrings have been worn from time immemorial. In earliest times, earrings were worn by Orientals of both sexes. Great ingenuity in design and style were demonstrated in their manufacture and wear by the Persians, Babylonians, Lyddians, Libians, and Carthaginians. Also, authentic proofs indicate that this means of personal adornment was practiced by the Greek women from Hera in the Iliad down to Venus de Medici.

Dead Sea Is Deepest

Outside of ocean basins, the deepest of all seas is the Dead sea, a sunken body of water which is noted chiefly for its life-giving salts. The Dead sea, it is believed, was originally four times its present length and its level that of the Mediterranean. This super-sea water is so dense that organic life cannot exist in it.

Lights of New York

By L. L. STEVENSON

White-haired women, bowed under the weight of years, stand in subway entrances and, with mute pleas in their faded eyes, extend to hurrying thousands packages or boxes of chewing gum. Usually clad in rusty black, some even wear those caps with chin bows that grandmothers used to wear. But generally the thousands are too time-driven, self-occupied or hardened to the pitifulness of poverty in old age to note details. After all, the chewing gum peddlers are such common sights that they attract no attention. So, for years, though millions of human units passed her by, few noticed Muriel Starin and few bought her wares. But enough did so that she continued to live in a room up in Harlem. Yet there had been a time when Muriel Starin had known luxury. But that was not known by those who had passed her by until, at the age of seventy, death came to her.

* * *

Then it was discovered that the woman who sold gum was the daughter of John H. Starin, who once owned Glen island in Long island sound and whose excursion steamers ran to Coney island, Staten island and New Haven.

When she reached womanhood, Miss Starin took up missionary work and for a number of years worked in Chinatown. Then she went to a church in Harlem and labored among the colored people. And when the years rested so heavily on her that she was forced to give up missionary work and live by selling gum in subways, it was a colored woman who gave her shelter until death closed her eyes.

* * *

She had another friend also, an undertaker to whose father she used to tell her troubles. That undertaker saw to it that the bent, little old gum peddler was buried in her grandfather's plot on Staten island—in the French Huguenot cemetery where the Vanderbilts rest.

* * *

That reminds me of another little old woman—one living up on Washington Heights with two old mongrel dogs. When there isn't food enough for the dogs and herself, she goes without. She doesn't mind. In all this great city, those two dogs are the only friends she has, she told a social worker recently. And a bird dealer once told me that parrots find such a ready sale in New York because they are company for the lonely.

* * *

Wise commuters—the kind that have been catching the same train for years and whose newspapers unfold automatically as they descend the ramp—always try to catch an earlier train on Wednesday afternoon. The reason for that is, according to one of them, because so many suburban mammas come to town for the Wednesday matinees. Not only do they take up seats needed by the regulars but they delay progress by proceeding leisurely in chattering groups. And he was ungallant enough to add that most are so well-fed that seats meant for three accommodate only two.

* * *

A patrolman who swings a mean club in the mid-town sector, but who is a friend of all the kids, told me this one: A ragged youngster approached a well-dressed man and asked him if he had lost anything. The man, spotting a fat wallet in the lad's hand, promptly answered that he had. So the boy turned the wallet over to him and received a dollar as a reward! But the chiseler found when he opened the wallet that it contained only tissue paper. He made a squawk to the cop—and got chased for trying to outsmart an apparently honest boy!

* * *

Then there was that truck driver who stopped his big vehicle on a narrow side street in such a manner that he tied up everything. An officer plowed his way through the din of horns and sought the offender. He was found in a place where strong liquids are dispensed and explained that his hands had become so cold that he was afraid to drive without warming them.

When cooking sour fruit add a pinch of carbonate of soda to the juice and it will require less sugar.

Damp towels should never be put into a clothes basket or bag and left there for days before being sent to the wash. Mildew is almost sure to result. Before being put into the basket, towels should be carefully dried.

Cubs Taken From Bear Whose Hugs Are Fatal

Columbus, Ohio.—Lena, a quarter-ton black bear, has had four litters of cubs at the Columbus zoo, and each time has carried her progeny around until they died. When she became the mother of triplets and awkwardly killed one of them, Keeper B. T. Evans decided to take charge.

He took the surviving cubs, both male, put them in a warm basket beside the furnace in the tropical animal house, and feeds them specially prepared milk from a bottle.

They weigh only half a pound each.

Fifty Famous Frontiersmen

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

His a "National Monument"

IT TOWERS nearly a thousand feet above the surrounding country, a silent sentinel over the beautiful valley of the North Platte river. It was a landmark for many a pioneer in the Covered Wagon days of the old Oregon Trail. It is a landmark today for many an automobile tourist speeding west, for when he reaches the city of Scotts Bluff, Neb., he sees off at the south across the river this huge mass of sandstone which bears the name of Scotts Bluff and perpetuates the name of Hiram Scott.

As a member of General Ashley's famous fur-trading expedition up the Missouri in 1823, Scott had first seen this mountain which was to become his monument. Then he became a free trapper and later a partner with Narcisse LeClerq in a company of trappers which reaped a rich harvest of peltries along the headwaters of the Platte.

In 1828 they started for St. Louis to market their furs. A hundred miles up the river from the mountain Scott was taken ill and left behind with two trappers, Roi and Bissonette, who were to bring him down the river by bullboat. But soon after they launched the clumsy craft, it upset and all their provisions and ammunition were lost. They managed to reach Laramie fork, 60 miles up the river from the mountain where LeClerq and the others were to await their coming.

They were half-starved and, leaving Scott in camp, the other two set out in search of food. Then they came across LeClerq's trail and deliberately decided to follow it and leave Scott to his fate. When they overtook LeClerq they told him that Scott had died, so he pushed on toward St. Louis.

Back at his camp near Laramie fork the realization soon came to Scott that his friends had deserted him. So he set out to follow them.

A year later Bissonette and old Joe Robideaux, seeking water from the spring that gushes from the southern slope of Scotts Bluff, found a skeleton not far away. From the buttons on the fragments of clothing still clinging to the bones and from other trinkets Bissonette recognized the skeleton as that of Hiram Scott. Then the story of the betrayal of the trapper by his two comrades came out. Tradition is that Bissonette and Robideaux buried the remains of Hiram Scott there and from that day the sandstone mountain which had been the goal of his weary journey was known as Scotts Bluff. A few years ago a tract of 2,300 acres surrounding it was set aside as a public reserve and this natural memorial to Hiram Scott became a "national monument."

"35 Battles—35 Victories"

"GOVERNOR of the state of Franklin; six terms governor of Tennessee; four times elected to congress; a projector and hero of King's Mountain; 35 battles—35 victories; his Indian war cry was: 'Here they are! Come on, boys, come on!'"

Such is the inscription on one side of a monument in Knoxville, Tenn., and it sums up the career of one of the most romantic figures in frontier history—that of John Sevier, "Nolichucky Jack."

Born in Virginia in 1744 of a French Huguenot family, Sevier emigrated to James Robertson's Watauga settlement in eastern Tennessee in 1773. Almost immediately the young Virginian became a leader in various forays against hostile Indians. By his audacity and the swiftness and unexpectedness of his attacks on the Indian towns, he broke the spirit of the Cherokees and their allies and prevented their being used by the British in a rear attack on the colonies during the Revolution.

He used the same tactics in one of the most brilliant victories over the British during that war. He was one of the leaders of the mountain men in their swift dash to trap Colonel Ferguson and his troops at King's mountain before they could receive aid from Cornwallis, and thus contributed to the victory at Yorktown.

After the Revolution the Watauga settlement became an orphan. Neither North Carolina nor the new federal government seemed to want it. So in 1784 the settlers organized the independent state of Franklin, a commonwealth unique in American history, and elected "Nolichucky Jack" as their governor. When North Carolina tried to assert its authority over the region again, the settlers resisted.

Their governor was singled out for punishment, treacherously betrayed, captured and placed on trial at Morgantown, N. C., for high treason. And at once more than 1,000 of the mountain men assembled to rescue their beloved "Nolichucky Jack." A civil war seemed imminent. But Sevier made a spectacular escape from his captors and a short time later his people elected him to the North Carolina legislature. There was some protest over seating him but eventually he was allowed to take office.

From that time on he was never long out of public life—as congressman from North Carolina, as the first governor of the new state of Tennessee, and then repeatedly re-elected, and thrice re-elected to congress. He died as he had lived—in the harness and in the field. The end came in 1815 in a tent on a surveying expedition for the government, surrounded by his soldiers.

HEALTH RACKETEERS

Medical quackery, which for several years gradually lost ground because of the growing tendency of newspapers to reject quack advertising, seems to have found a new potential aid in the radio. Much advertising which no self-respecting newspaper would print is freely broadcast over the air, evidently with some success in attracting suckers, because it is being continued in undiminished volume. Those who prey upon the public by fraudulently cashing in on the universal desire for health are characterized by Dr. E. P. Lyon, dean of the medical school of the University of Minnesota, as "health racketeers." He says of this type of faker:

"His health patter is psuedo science. His eye is on your check-book. In these days especially he prostitutes the radio to his uses. Quacks and quackery, fakers and fakery of all kinds appeal to a bewildered public between jazz and the nasal tenor, with blatant advertisements that no reputable journal will print. Oh, health, what crimes are committed in thy name!"

DEEPEST WELLS

While aviators are breaking records for height, oil men are breaking records for depth, with the further difference, however, that in the latter case the descent is made by drilling tools and pipes, instead of men themselves. One of the deepest holes ever drilled into the earth, completed as an oil producer in Reagan county, Texas, reached a depth of 8,520 feet, or about one and five-eights miles. It produced about 600 barrels a day.

Other deep holes include one in Orange county, California, 8,201 feet, which was a failure; a gas well near Ligonier, Pennsylvania, 7,756 feet, and a small producing oil well in the Rosecrans field of California, 7,591 feet.

Besides opening up a vast field for deeper drilling, the Texas well will make a contribution to education, the royalty of one-eighth of all the oil produced being owned by the University of Texas, which has already received more than ten million dollars from its oil land holdings.

When it is recalled that the first producing oil well in the United States, drilled near Titusville, Pennsylvania, in 1859, was only thirty-four feet deep, the amazing advance made by the industry since that time may be better appreciated.

A statistician estimates that there are about seventy billion birds in the world. Which may help to grasp the significance of Uncle Sam's owing half that many dollars.

THE SHERMAN TREE

The largest living thing on earth, and probably the oldest, is the General Sherman tree in Sequoia National Park California. By precise observations and calculations a committee of engineers determined that this tree was the biggest of the giant redwoods, while the General Grant tree is second in size.

The General Grant tree has a volume of slightly more than 600,000 board feet of lumber. Its height is 272 feet and its cicumference at the ground is 88 feet.

It is estimated that these largest trees are 5,000 or more years old.

NOSE RING WEDDINGS

It may be surprising to many to know that even today among the Kamia Indians of California the wedding ceremony requires the placing of a ring in the bridegroom's nose, instead of on the bride's finger.

The nose-piercing is itself a ceremonial event, and takes place some time before the wedding, the operation being performed with a wooden needle. Four candidates for matrimony must submit to this ordeal at the same time, after which they must run fifteen miles, then remain four days on a restricted diet, while women nearby sing continuously. Following this the youths must go naked for a month, not being allowed to eat deer, jack-rabbit or fish. Then they are all set for the wedding.

Perhaps the Kamia bride employs the ring as an aid in holding the spouse's nose to the grindstone, as many of her white sisters do without any such device.

THE LIFE SPARK

Studies in biology and bio-chemistry have developed many astounding facts, many of which have been of inestimable value to mankind, but the ultimate goal of such research is to find the secret of the life spark itself, and produce it from inert matter.

That this will some day be accomplished is the belief of many distinguished scientists, although this idea is flouted by those who hold to the traditional belief in the creation of all life by special acts of a Supreme Being.

Professor William Lash Miller, internationally known bio-chemist of the University of Toronto, has produced in his laboratory a component part of living matter, and his accomplishment is hailed as one of epochal importance by many fellow scientists.

Just what significance may be attached to Professor Miller's latest discovery is somewhat difficult for a layman to judge, but it appears that it may mark a most important step toward the solution of the age-old quesion: What is life?

HONORARY DEGREES

Among the valuable public services that may be placed to the credit of Will Rogers, his debunking of honorary degrees is conspicuous and refreshing. When he was offered the honorary degree of Doctor of Humanities by Oklahoma City University, he gracefully declined the honor in a telegram which was both humorous and evidently sincere. After explaining that the highest degree he would accept would be A. D. (Doctor of Applesauce) only if conferred by the kindergarten department of the Oolagah public school, Will said:

"What are you trying to do? Make a joke out of college degrees? They are in bad enough repute as it is, without trying to hand 'em around to comedians. The whole honorary degree thing is the 'hooey.' I got too much respect for people that work and earn 'em to see 'em handed around to every notorious character."

Collegiate degrees conferred as a result of conformance to curriculum requirements are generally futile enough. The honorary degree is not only futile, but positively amusing to anyone with a sense of humor approaching that of Will Rogers.

A CHAMPION SPELLER

Notoriously poor spellers as most Americans are, once in a while there is found one who can really spell. And such a one is 12-year-old Courtney B. Lawson, of Chautauqua, N. Y., state spelling champion. In the contest in which he won his title by spelling 350 words of unusual difficulty without a miss, the first three places went to boys, which is unusual. Girls generally rank higher than boys as spellers, unless, as a cynic remarks, they happen to be stenographers.

Anyway, here are a few of the 350 words which young Lawson negotiated successfully: Auxiliary, equinoctial, shellac, succinct, perennial, liquefy, scrupulous, infallible, silhouette, convalescent, repellent, macaroon, tyrannical, personnel, ennoble, malefactor, panacea, rhinoceros, jeopardize, portiere.

We haven't the complete list, but assume that such old favorites as Britannica, parallel and battalion were not omitted. Hats off to Courtney B. Lawson! He may be a great proofreader some day.

Mary Goldman, the anarchist, who was deported from the United States to Russia in 1919, has been given permission to return to this country for a short visit with relatives and friends. Russia deported her for saying Soviet rule was "a tyranny a hundred times worse than Czardom." She is now a British subject.

Candidates are most sincere in their desire to ably serve the dear people. In fact, they admit it themselves.

Maybe a man is sometimes characterized as a "bird" because his eyes flit from limb to limb.

SIDELIGHTS

Passengers on a steamer bound from England to America recently made up a purse for presentation to a baby born on board, the total sum being $250.03. Someone suggested that a Scotchman must be on board. A check-up revealed that there were three Scotchmen on board.

The old idea that a heavy jaw and prominent chin indicate strength of character is not necessarily true, according to Dr. Williamson, a noted Australian orthodontist. It is, however, an indication that the individual concerned did not suck his thumb when a baby.

Harry Sommerfield, of Chicago, is another who agrees that there isn't much in a name. He is suing Love and Honey for $5,000 damages alleging that Elmer Love slugged him in the jaw while Haycroft Honey gave him several swift kicks in the midsection, following an argument over a bottle of liquor.

Anyone who feels the urge to open a new filling station might well consider the opportunities in Ethiopia. We read that gasoline is scarce and high over there, selling for 91 cents a gallon.

We don't know very much about relativity, but Dr. Edna Heibreder gives an illustration which may be helpful to thoes who try to understand it. She says "an insane person is just like a sane one—only more so."

Through a make-up man's error a Philadelphia newspaper appeared with the heading "Tours" over a column of death notices. The persons concerned took a "tour," all right, but none had a return ticket.

It is highly desirable to have a sense of humor, and Tom Soldad, a California plumber, agrees with that as a general proposition, but insists that it can be overdone. He has sued for divorce because his wife "spent the first week of their married life laughing at him."

During the recent Mardi Gras festivities in New Orleans, a bright idea came to Jesus Morrano, a Mexican cripple, weak from lack of food. Mustering his remaining strength, he smashed a plate glass window worth $110 and awaited the result. Police took him in and gave him in jail his first full meal in weeks.

A not very plausible bridge story comes from New York. Miss Daisy Tunick held thirteen spades, and when an adversary bid a grand slam in diamonds she bid eight spades. Naturally, she was set one trick. Her partner, being unarmed, committed no physical violence, but used some unparliamentary language which broke up the game.

A Hoboken woman is suing a bakery bcause she broke a tooth on a bolt found in one of her pies. We have always heard it was bad to bolt food.

Would Honor Columbus With National Holiday

For several years past there has been a great deal of agitation in the legislative halls, as well as by the press and radio, to induce Congress to create a national holiday on October 12, to be known as Columbus Day. And now we are advised that Representitive Francis B. Condon, of Rhode Island. is sponsoring a resolution to this effect in the House of Representitives, which resolution has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Columbus Day is recognized as a legal holiday by a number of states. Although a vast number of American people are not convinced that Columbus was the real discoverer of America, the ever increasing agitation in behalf of a greater recognition of the Genoese explorer is being experienced. For the President to sign such a bill upon its successful passing by both Houses of Congress would, in the opinion of many, be tantamount to putting Christopher Columbus on an equal basis with George Washington and on a more exalted plane than the Great Emancipator.

A Record of Progress By Insurance Company

Continuing the outstanding record of progress established during 1933, Occidental Life Insurance Company of California, a subsidiary of Transamerica Corporation, in January registered a 33 1-3 per cent gain over the corresponding month last year in new insurance completed.

Occidental Life's January production of new insurance completed, excluding group insurance, totaled $4,340,777, which compares with $3,245,858 for January a year ago.

The January showing extends an upward trend which was apparent throughout 1933, a period during which Occidental Life completed new insurance, excluding group, in the total amount of $54,734,985, or a gain of $17,906,962 over 1932. The company closed the year with total insurance in force of $172,168,000.

Brilliant European Star Coming to Curran Theatre

Henry Duffy and Homer F. Curran have definitely set Monday evening, March 12, for the appearance of Francis Lederer, the brilliant young Czecho-Slovakian star who has re-established the reign of the matinee idol. He will be seen in the gay romantic comedy "Autumn Crocus," at the Curran Theatre in San Francisco.

Francis Lederer has conquered London, New York and Hollywood as "the gentleman in gay braces," his role in the C. L. Anthony play. He comes to San Francisco direct from an eight weeks' record breaking run in Hollywood, where every star of the film capital heaped praise upon his brow for the brilliant part he has played in creating renewed enthusiasm on the speaking stage.

In the play Lederer is a Tyrolean inn-keeper. He falls in love with an English schoolteacher, who spends a day or two at his inn. He brings romance to her arid life, and she very nearly consents when he proposes that she remain with him as his mistress. There are many quaint characters in the comedy, the different people who come and go at a caravansary devoted to tourists.

Julie Haydon was chosen by Mr. Lederer to play this role, "the lady in spectacles," after he had interviewed nearly every actress in Hollywood. The play is set in a production said to be one of the most brilliant and beautiful ever seen in California.

Modoc Lava Beds Mapped By U. S. Forest Service

A detailed topographic map of the Modoc lava beds in the Modoc National forest of northeastern California is being constructed at the U. S. Forest Service headquarters in San Francisco. This region, scene of the Modoc war and now included within a national monument under the administration of the Forest Service, was mapped last summer by C. C. C. enrollees working under the direction of forest engineers.

The new map, with contour inervals of from 5 to 25 feet, will show all details of this interesting and unusual part of California where comparatively recent lava flows, geologically speaking, give an idea of nature in the raw and how it was possible in 1873 for Captain Jack and his band of Indians to hold Uncle Sam's soldiers at bay for five months in California's only Indian war.

The surveyors discovered a total of 224 caves in the lava where ice and ice water is always on tap, and they counted sixteen craters and seventy-five fumeroles or miniature mud craters. In one section a crevass from 20 to 40 feet deep was found extending three miles across the old lava flow. These features, together with such historical spots as Canby's Cross, where the General was murdered by Indians under a flag of truce, the old forts and Captain Jack's stronghold, will be shown on the new map drawn to the scale of two inches to the mile.

He Had a Reason

"Richard," mother began, only to be interrupted by her small son.

"Call me Henry today, mamma," he pleaded.

"Why on earth do you want me to call you Henry?" she asked in surprise.

"Because," he explained seriously, "daddy said he was going to use the razor strop on me some place when he got home tonight, just as sure as my name is Richard."

A FRONT PAGE STORY

By COSMO HAMILTON

©, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service

LOST, NEAR BROADWAY AND 44TH St., three $100 bills. Will finder please return to Nora Connors, Lavere hotel, New York.

THE green-visored young man who was about to set up this ad emitted a whoop and addressed the composing room in general. Not since the Prophet Mahomet ordered the mountain to come to him had anything quite so optimistic been heard of. But that was not exactly how the young man expressed himself. What he actually said was: "Say, you guys! Run your lamps over this gem. What a swell chance that Jane's got of ever glimpsing her three hundred smackers again! Huh?"

They clustered round and read it.

"I'll tell the cock-eyed universe she'll never see that dough again!"

"Haw—haw—haw!"

"Can you tie that?"

"Maybe those bills are still lying just where she dropped 'em!"

"Sure! Nobody on Broadway'd be so mean's to pick up a paltry bit of change that didn't belong to them!"

And so the comments flew until an oldish man with horn-rimmed spectacles balanced perilously near the tip of his nose exclaimed: "Well—wadja know about that!"

Now, when some one unleashes "wadja know about that" the last word has been said. Anything further would be anti-climax. So the compositors trickled back to their respective jobs.

• • •

Nora's simple faith in mankind probably amused those few curious people who glanced over the Lost and Found column the next morning. It certainly brought a smile to the face of Solly Rosenberg as he crunched his breakfast toast and gulped coffee.

Within half an hour of reading that ad, Solly Rosenberg was interviewing Nora Connors at the modest Laverne hotel. Nora seemed over-awed of this expensively dressed little man with much yellow bullion in his teeth, a massive diamond ring on either hand, and a diamond pin in his necktie.

"So you lost this money about three o'clock yesterday afternoon," Mr. Rosenberg was saying.

"Yes, that was when I missed it from my handbag, sir," Nora answered, her large, frank, blue eyes fixed on his.

"D'you live here?"

"No, sir, I only arrived in New York yesterday from South Bend, Ind."

"On a vacation?"

"Oh, no. I came to take painting lessons, and that money I lost was to pay for them. My young brother and I saved it up . . . we're orphans . . . . and it took us over two years to do it."

"Ah!" said Mr. Rosenberg, beaming. He had hardly hoped for anything so good as this.

"And you see, sir," Nora continued, brushing back a strand of her fluffy golden hair with pretty hand, "if that money isn't returned to me I'll have to go back to South Bend, and that will be the end of my life's ambition . . . to paint." Her lips trembled and she lowered her silken lashes to hold back the tears.

"Now, don't you get all het up, little girl," said Mr. Rosenberg. "I've got some bully news for you. Your money's been found—luckily by an honest party—and you're going to get it back."

"Oh, how wonderful!" Nora clapped her hands. "You know," she said, "after all I'd heard about New York I was just a little worried that the finder might not return it to me."

Mr. Rosenberg extracted three $100 bills from a black pocketbook and handed them towards her.

"There you are, my dear," he said.

"But—those are not my notes," Nora protested. "Mine were dirty and crumpled—not clean and new like those."

"I know—I know, my dear. Let me tell you what happened. Your money was picked up by Gladiola Gladsome—her new picture, the Gorgeous Sin, opens here next Thursday. And it's a dandy picture, believe me. Well—Gladiola gives me the dough and asks me to try and find out who lost it. She's a mighty fine woman, is Gladiola. Now those notes didn't look none too sanitary to be carrying about, so I changed them at the bank for clean ones, see?"

"Oh, yes," Nora said, smiling and taking the bills. "At first I was afraid you were just being kind and pretending you found my money. Of course, I couldn't have accepted . . ."

"Certainly not, my dear."

"Thank you again so much," said Nora some minutes later, rising and holding out her hand. "I'll write to Miss Gladsome and thank her right away."

"Yes, do that. She'll appreciate it," Mr. Rosenberg said, running his eyes over her boyish figure and straight legs. "And, by the way, I s'pose you haven't got many friends here yet. What'd you say to having dinner with me tonight? Solly Rosenberg's a good man to stand in with. He's pretty close to all the big men in this town."

"That's awfully nice of you, Mr. Rosenberg, but I couldn't. I know my brother wouldn't like me to go out with anyone on such a short acquaintance. Perhaps when we know each other better, eh?"

"Sure! That's all right by me. You know—a pretty girl like you ought to have somebody who knows the ropes to look after her a bit. I'll call you up some time soon."

"You won't forget, will you?"

"Forget nothing! And maybe I could work it to take you over to Gladiola's apartment one of these days."

"I'd simply love that, Mr. Rosenberg. I'm sure she must be sweet."

"Well—goodby for the present, little girl."

"Goodby, Mr. Rosenberg. And thank you again so much."

• • •

Solly Rosenberg chuckled as, later that morning, he stepped into Gladiola Gladsome's apartment, a 12-room affair furnished in the catch-as-catch-can period. Chinese lacquered pieces crowded early English, Dutch, and ornate Louis Seize pieces.

"Hullo, Glad!" Solly called, pausing outside the star's bedroom door. "Can I come in?"

"Hey! What's the big idea busting in on decent folks in the middle of the night?" came Gladiola's response. "Don't you ever go to bed?"

"It's half after eleven, Glad, and I have to see you about something mighty important." Solly flicked cigar ash on the Persian rug, and waited.

"Well—come in," she said at last somewhat petulantly.

Gladiola's favorite perfume swirled into Solly's nostrils as he opened the door. In the dim light he could just make out her face in the gilt bed she'd had made in the shape of an enormous swan, and covering her was a bedspread of crimson ostrich feathers.

"I breezed in to tell you," said Solly, depositing himself in a lingerie-littered chair, "that I just bought ten thousand dollars worth of advertising for you for three hundred."

"How come?"

He told her about Nora Connors. Then: "Did you ever hear of a better one than that, Glad? Why, it'll be on the front page of every newspaper in the country! Can't you just see the headlines! GLADIOLA GLADSOME RESTORES POOR ORPHAN GIRL'S SAVINGS. And that's the stuff the public likes." He rubbed his hands.

"Sounds good, Solly. But how d'you know this kid wasn't just taking a chance on finding a soft-hearted sucker who'd pass her three hundred berries? Maybe she never lost that dough at all."

"Now, Glad!" Solly reproached her, spreading out his fat hands. "We should worry if she was picking up a bit of easy money! That don't stop us using the story just the same, see?"

"Guess you're right, Solly. I didn't think of that."

"Sure I'm right! And if it ain't the swellest stunt that's been pulled this year then I'm not the slickest publicity man in the game."

"Nobody's arguing about that, old kid. You're all there!"

"Well—I'll beat it now. Sorry to crash in on your beauty sleep, but I had to put you wise on account some of them editors might call you up after I handed in the story, see?"

• • •

News was scarce that day. Things were quiet on the Chicago front, and what murders had been committed in other places were neither sensational nor picturesque. No one was trying to swim the Atlantic; and only three or four more judges and magistrates had been indicted for one thing or another. Wherefore, editors welcomed Solly Rosenberg and his front page story. At any rate, it was something, and they were prepared to make the most of it.

When, however, Louis Hyams, publicity man for another famous film star, Joy Gold, arrived shortly afterwards and stated that Miss Gold had found and returned Miss Connors' money, the editors smiled and held up the story.

Then, hot on Louis Hyams' heels came Jake Samuels, publicity man for Alyss Jasmine; and later, Herman Lyons, representing Mamie Rogers, each with the same yarn about his client.

Soon four bright publicity men and a number of chortling editors and reporters were trying to get Nora Connors on the telephone at the Laverne hotel. She had checked out—leaving no address.

Just the same, the editors had a corking front page story.

Finds 1859 Merchandise Bill of Familiar Goods

Thomas B. Corley, a farmer of Jefferson Davis county, Mississippi, was rooting around among some old papers recently and came across an itemized bill for goods delivered to his grandfather, says the New Orlean Times-Picayune.

Corley's grandfather lived about thirty-five miles from Brandon, right down through the pine thickets, considered one of the finest forests in the world, says the writer, and the itemized bill indicates that he bought his supplies in the year 1859.

The old bill is still legible, made out in flourishing longhand. It shows a wool hat at $1.75; a sack of coffee, at $21, but Mr. Corley did not forget his sugar, a 200-pound sack at $22; his tobacco was 18 pounds at 40 cents, $7.20, and on through the long bill, not forgetting a sausage stuffer at 40 cents.

Pigs in War on Locusts

Every one in Wagram, Algeria, has been called to join in the battle against locusts, which are devouring the surrounding vegetation. Organized bands of natives have killed, collected and buried 15 tons of the insects and 400 pigs have been consuming nearly two tons of locusts every day

Crisp White Neckwear's the Thing

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SUCH an exciting season of striking crisp white neckwear as is this! Seems as if most of spring and summer costume interest is centering about neckwear treatments. It really is not overstating the matter to say that frilly, frivolous and altogether fascinating details at necklines, sleeves, shoulders and wrists are just about to "steal the show."

That oft-repeated theme of black-and-white comes to us for spring in terms of chic black frocks which are lavishly enlivened with the most beguiling crisp white neckwear fancy can picture. For that matter, whether the dress be one of the new black or dark blue crepes or a swanky thin pastel woolen, or a print done in the new bizarre coloring, the first thing to strike one about it is almost sure to be the feminine frilly white neckwear which adorns it.

As to the materials for these all-important neckwear items they include most everything from tailored piques, taffetas and washable crepes to sheerest of transparent mousselines and organdies. And there's lace! Don't forget lace, for any amount of pretty lace fixings are in promise, ranging from Irish crochet and all-over patternings to daintiest valenciennes.

Possibly it is the frilly little sheer pleatings which are assigned the leading role in this play of neckwear. Anyway "oodles and oodles" of wee pleatings are running riot about necklines and sleeves and up, down and around front fastenings.

The illustration presents a few neckwear highspots. Since these sketches speak so dramatically for themselves, instead of describing them individually we would much rather tell you about the perfectly adorable neckwear fantasies which are designed to simulate flowers. For example, a capelike bib effect is formed of a mass of long spearlike petals suggesting the chrysanthemum motif. Then there is the daisy collar which is made of long petal tabs. A cala lily theme is interpreted via a series of cornucopia rolled tabs of white pique. Tulips, orchids and roses are also copied in various white weaves. Of course mere words do not do them justice; they have to be seen to yield to their magic spell.

We have not attempted to picture by word or sketch the multitudinous tailored fashions which are featured on the vast neckwear program mapped out for the coming months. Plentiful versions appear in starched and stitched linen and pique in plain and embroidered organdie and there is a big showing of printed silk neck togs. Outstanding in this class are the clever scarf and bib effects made of gay Mexican silk stripes.

For afternoon wear there are collar and cuff sets fashioned of metal-barred and embroidered taffetas stressing bright greens and reds and other primary colors, likewise blacks and navies with gold or silver patternings, with gold on white being an outstanding favorite.

Huge bows either of gay silks or fashioned of sheer white weaves are receiving lots of attention. Very elaborate lingerie bows are made of masses of little "val" edgings or work embroidered organdie and lace together.

Many of the bright silk collars and bows have matching hats and even a belt and a bag of the identical silk is sometimes added.

COLORS FOR SPRING COVER WIDE RANGE

Talk of colors for spring includes such phrases as "bright light" colors and "dirty" pastels.

In the pastel range baby pink influenced by gray or grege, and bois de rose inclining toward ashes of roses; blues in pearly tone are leading tones.

In the brighter range are Chinese and geranium reds, similar respectively to manchu and sunred; a tango shade like Indian orange, and a corn yellow with less green in it than the corngold.

Of basic colors, everyone agrees on another season for navy, both dark and light, and look for the big success of string color, grege and other naturals.

Nipped-In Waist and Wide Shoulders Is Spring Note

Nipped in at the waist and width through the shoulder still is a formula for very chic costumes that are coming from the hands of leading designers. This forerunner of the spring silhouette is especially interesting, since it indicates that a fashion thought that might be regarded as "killed" in one season because of overemphasis in mass fashions may be reinterpreted for another season and through the skillful hands that deal with a trend in the restrained manner of the better designer reincarnated into a fashion for the ultra chic.

It is Schiaparelli and Chanel who are responsible for this revived interest in the padded shoulder.

Form-Fitted Slips

Slips, which are replacing chemises in many smart women's wardrobes, are cut in form-fitting lines and fitted so smoothly that not a wrinkle can spoil the line of a frock. Point d'esprit, which looks like a lacy net, makes a number of models.

'KERCHIEF BLOUSE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

If you look close you will note that the waist portion of this dress extends below the belt at the front in a point—which is what is meant when we refer to the "kerchief blouse." You will see this handkerchief point theme interpreted repeatedly all through the spring and summer modes. The material for this simple and effective gown is a brown and white cravat silk. Note the very new three-quarter sleeves. The buckle is a red and white novelty.

Queen Anne's Lace

SYNOPSIS

At a dance, a visitor in the community, Neal Conrad, young lawyer, is impressed by Anne Chamberlain, pretty daughter of a shiftless farmer, preceiving her fine character. A few days later she accompanies him and his hostess, Mrs. Griffin, on a picnic. At the end of the day Neal declares his love. At Washington, on their honeymoon, the Conrads meet Clarence Hathaway, friend of Neal's, young diplomat. The young couple start housekeeping. Anne's health begins to fail. Neal, engrossed in politics, does not notice. She realizes she is to be a mother. While Neal is away, Anne has a visit from an old friend, Mr. Goldenburg. In Neal's absence he takes charge of the situation. Neal is in an agony of remorse over his neglect. Their son is born. In the ensuing eight years Neal's law practice and his position in politics both mount. A daughter has been born to Anne, but her beauty is fading. Clarence Hathaway, now in a diplomatic post in Paris, visits the Conrads. He reproaches Neal for allowing Anne to "stagnate," and suggests Neal and Anne take a holiday, with him, in France.

As soon as she had the proper toilette, Clare gave a luncheon in his apartment to which the ambassador and the ambassadress came as "honor guests," though it was really in honor of Neal and Anne. Thus launched, they found themselves approaching the Grande Semaine with a new circle of delightful acquaintances.

Anne learned to ride—Clare had two horses so there was always one at her disposal. She learned to drive Clare's Mercedes. Neal had never thought she "would be able to manage" the Dodge, but now he saw that he had been mistaken. Watching her development, he realized that Clare had not said half that might be said about her possibilities. Well, he would never make the old mistakes again. They were going home now, very soon, and when they did . . .

Anne came into the room waiting for his praise.

"I don't dare kiss you, darling," he mumbled, behind his enveloping handkerchief. "Sure to give this darned cold to you.—Clare's sent up word he's waiting for you. Have a good time."

She found Clare leaning against the boxlike desk of the concierge, chatting with that functionary.

"Neal has a cold," she said as they shook hands, "he couldn't risk going out, of course. But he insisted that I should come, just the same."

"Naturally. I should never have forgiven you if you hadn't."

They were soon skimming out towards the Champs-Elysees. Today Clare was driving himself—it was a long time, Anne realized, since she had seen his discreet little chauffeur.

"And so—you're really leaving Tuesday?" Clare asked.

"I suppose so."

"You sound as if you were sorry."

"Oh, Clare—how could anyone help being sorry to leave Paris for Hinsboro?"

There was real grief in her voice; but the next instant she tried to catch back the words.

"Of course I'm counting the days until I see Junior and Nancy. If I could only have had them here, too, it would have been quite perfect."

"Well, I can understand that the sort of existence you were leading when I came to your house last spring might pall a good deal now."

"And if it hadn't been for you," she said with eager gratitude, "I never would have had a glimpse, perhaps, of any other kind of existence! You persuaded Neal to give me this wonderful chance. I can't ever thank you enough."

"Don't try," he said lightly, "it hasn't been a dull summer for me, either, you know. Ah—here we are."

He helped her out of the motor, and they passed through the arched entrance of the Chateau de Madrid. In a moment, a garcon who had waited on them before, and whose flashing smile gave them welcome, began bringing in tea and little cakes. The orchestra was playing, most unusually, a slow and ancient waltz. Clare rose, pushed back his chair, and bowed.

"Shall we dance?" he asked.

She nodded, and rising, laid her arm lightly on his sleeve, as they walked over to the parquet. Then she slipped into his arms. He was a remarkably fine dancer, and, closely held, she followed his sure and graceful lead for a few moments without speaking. Then suddenly, she raised her head.

"Isn't that 'The Beautiful Blue Danube' they're playing?"

"Yes. The best waltz ever written, probably."

"Would—would you mind very much if we didn't finish it? If—if we didn't finish our tea?"

"Aren't you well, Anne?"

"Yes. But I—I feel a little faint. I think I had better go home."

"Too bad—but never mind! I'll drive you back through the Bois. You'll feel better moving about in the air. It is frightfully hot. And heat always seems so much worse, out of season."

He made no objections, expressed no surprise. In fact, he said nothing at all until they had reached the little lake where so many happy bourgeois lovers hire boats and row placidly about. Then he stopped the car.

"We may as well have this out now, Anne," he said, quietly, "I'd prefer to take you to my apartment, but of course you'd refuse to go. We can sit on that bank."

He spread out a light wrap she had brought with her, and motioned to her to sit down.

"Well," he questioned, still lightly, when looking a protest but uttering none, she had settled herself, "Have you actually realized at last that I am in love with you?"

She nodded, her eyes filling with tears.

"Don't cry, Anne. There'll be nothing to cry about, you'll see. . . . And you feel sure Neal doesn't suspect at all?"

"How could he?" she asked simply.

"You mean, it would never occur to him that his best friend would try to approach—his wife?"

A more meaning word had been on the tip of his tongue. He had softened it just in time.

"Of course it wouldn't occur to him. He would never do such a thing himself."

"You're probably right. Neal, with all his faults, is intrinsically honest. Also, he is not oversexed. Which makes it the easier for him to be honest."

"You shan't speak of Neal like that!" flashed Anne, "as if it were ridiculous to be honest and—and decent!"

"It isn't ridiculous. But it's sometimes inadequate.

"Listen, Anne," he went on, as she stared at him, apparently too stunned to answer, "I must ask you to believe that I haven't gone about this—with malice and forethought, so to speak. When I came to your house last spring, I pitied you, and admired you, and I wanted you to have a good time. That was the reason I persuaded Neal to bring you here, and the only reason. I hope very, very much that you will believe this."

"I do believe it," said Anne.

"But I was very lonely. I'd been through a dreadful domestic experience—"

"And now you want me to do the same thing to Neal that your wife did to you?"

She had scored. But, after a moment's hesitation, he went on, still speaking calmly. "Since you put it so crudely, I suppose I do now. But I never dreamed it was going to come to that. To be perfectly frank, I didn't think you had it in you to attract me, in the sense of making me—want you.

Then, Abandoning All Restraint, He Kissed Her, Over and Over Again, on the Mouth.

Well, I was mistaken. But even so, I don't believe matters would have gone as far as this if I hadn't begun to see that—I attracted you, too."

"You don't," cried Anne. "Oh, how can you say such dreadful things! I never loved anyone but Neal, never in all my life! Why, I wouldn't even finish that dance with you because I suddenly remembered that the 'Beautiful Blue Danube' was the very first waltz Neal and I ever had together. . . . I very nearly didn't come out with you today at all. I hesitated a long time. If Neal hadn't insisted . . ."

"Exactly. If you weren't in love with me you wouldn't be self-conscious about motoring with me or joking with me, or having me close to you in a dance. You wouldn't be here listening to me now. Anne . . ."

In the deepening twilight he leaned suddenly towards her, and flung his arms about her. Then, abandoning all restraint, he kissed her, over and over again, on the mouth. The passion and violence of the embrace, without preliminary caress, struck her like a blow. But with a sickening sense of self-horror she realized that she had made no determined effort to escape from it; that she had, for a moment, actually responded to it; realized also that Clare, still holding her, was speaking to her in a voice vibrant with triumph.

"You see,"—he whispered. "Anne, darling, won't you admit—for you do see that you love me. You wouldn't have kissed back if you didn't. I'll make everything very easy for you, about the children and all that. Neal wouldn't take them from you. He'll either find, when he gets home, that he's dead politically once and for all, as I rather suspect, or he'll throw himself into his career again, and forget about you, as he's done before. In either case, you'll be left to face that awful isolation and drudgery, and you know you can't do that. You know you want to stay here with me, in this beautiful bright city, where you've begun to live for the first time. Once we were married, every one would forget all about it, if we behaved ourselves."

FOREIGN WARS VETS ENTERTAIN DISABLED

Under the able direction of I. E. Nelson, of Palo Alto, chairman of the Northern Rehabilitation Committee of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Department of California, a very fine program was given last Sunday afternoon for the Veterans confined in the Government hospital at Livermore.

Through the co-operation of Charles Frenchi, director, and A. Harrington, Commander, Musician's Post No. 1944, V. F. W., of San Francisco, furnished a band concert that was highly appreciated not only by the disabled veterans in the hospital, but also by a large crowd of visiting friends and relatives.

Others, whose parts in the program were highly appreciated were Frank McCormick, radio star, and Jose San Filipino, concertina player, both from San Francisco; Alta Bell, toe dancer, and Marcella Bracchi, tap dancer, of Palo Alto; Albert Lippie, Freddie Vascuez, accordions, and Mrs. Valerie Murray and Mrs. Herman Swant, singers, all of San Jose.

After the program the band and entertainers were all taken to the Veterans' Memorial building in Livermore, where refreshments were served by Livermore Post No. 1010, V. F. W.

SILVER—THE NEXT STEP

The Presidential proclamation fixing the price of silver at 64½ cents per ounce is, in the view of a number of monetary experts, simply the first important step in bringing the silver problem to a logical conclusion. This price marks a definite advance over recent silver quotations. But during the last few months there has been a jump in the value of gold of more than 50 per cent, as part of the government's dollar devaluation policy. The result is that silver, in relation to gold, is actually cheaper than usual.

It is the belief of many that the essential thing is the establishment of a definite relation in the values of gold and silver—so that when gold goes up or down, the value of silver will automatically follow. They believe that only in this way can foreign trade be really stimulated, and our lost commerce regained.

This theory, of course, has its expert opponents, precisely as it has its expert advocates. That is an excellent thing—the debate will bring it before the public, and widen our general knowledge of the whole question of money. It is something for every citizen to watch.

DID YOU EVER STOP TO THINK?

By Edson R. Waite, Shawnee, Okla.

That the merchants of the home city render service with the goods they sell.

They do their best to please their customers. They know when they please them they make steady customers.

They have a wide selection of seasonable merchandise from which to select.

They want all the business of the home city.

They should get it.

Home prjde and a desire to help the home city should influence all citizens to buy at home.

When they help to make better business for their city, they are helping themselves.

Earning money in one city and spending it in another is poor business.

There is no excuse for buying by mail when everything needed can be bought at home.

IRISH WILL HONOR EMMET

Many talented artists will pass in review before the auditorium is cleared for modern and old-fashioned dancing.

OILING SPRINGS

Springs that are oiled too frequently or too generously may contribute to steering trouble or shimmying, according to the Free Emergency Road Service of the California State Automobile Association. Spring squeaks usually can be stopped by squirting a little light penetrating oil on the ends of the leaves. Most squeaks develop where the end of the second leaf touches the main leaf.

Anson Athern, 5, of Rockland, Me., saved himself by his presence of mind when struck by an automobile, clinging to the bumper until the car was stopped.

SOMETHING NEW

Successful tests have been conducted recently with an oxygen breathing apparatus which can be used under water to recover the bodies of drowning persons.

Two hues from one auto lamp, a white light for high-speed driving and an amber light for penetrating fog, are offered by using a two-colored bulb which provides either light when a switch is pressed

Protection for the home is provided by a new fire-alarm device which simply plugs into the nearest electric outlet.

Instantaneous written communications between business departments by "micro-wave" radio can now be sent with the aid of an instrument known as a radiotype which transmits graphic messages as fast as they are typed.

For puting an edge on a knife or other small implement, a compact sharpener offers three oil stones of varying roughness.

Requiring no adjustment, a new wrench is offered which fits eight sizes of hexagon nuts or bolts.

Operated by turning a handle, an ice-making machine for the home has been produced in England.

Adequate illumination for shaving is provided by a combined mirror and light which is attached to the wall by means of a bracket with a vacuum cup.

Adaptable to many purposes in the home or shop, a small electric saw has been produced in France.

Tried extensively in Germany and England, a new anesthetic which is injected directly into the blood may prove as valuable as ether for certain types of surgical operations.

Operated by an automobile with its rear wheels blocked off the ground, a launching winch for gliders has been tested successfuly in the United States.

Something new in summer ventilation for the automobile is offered in rotary sunshade that spins rapidly when the car is in motion.

LITERARY PIRACY

Following the lead of our American "debunkers," parhaps, literary critics are unearthing what they claim to be monumental frauds perpetrated by authors of supposed imperishable fame.

For example, it is now claimed, with much show of plausibility, that Dumas stole the plot of "The Three Musketeers" from a book by one Courtil de Sandras, published in 1701. Also that many other novels by the famous French mulatto was taken from books a few centuries old, which Dumas "jazzed up" and published as his own.

Another alleged discovery is that John Bunyan cribbed the esesntials of his "Pilgrim's Progress" from a story by Guileville, a Frenchman who lived three centuries before Bunyan. Then, again, it is asserted that Parson Weems filched the story of Washington's hatchet and cherry tree from a story very much older, which pertained to an entirely different person. It is quite generally accepted among scholars that the cheery tree story is a myth, regardless of its original source.

And lest we be charged with piracy ourselves, let us hasten to say that the above information is condensed from an article in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, as quoted in the Literary Digest.

ELEVEN KINDS OF MONEY

When we are fortunate enough to get hold of some of Uncle Sam's coin of the realm we seldom scrutinize it closely, because we know that for practical purposes one dollar is as good as another.

In fact, the average citizen is probably unaware that there are eleven distinct kinds of United States money, but such is the case. These include federal reserve notes, national bank notes, silver certificates, gold coin, United States notes, subsidiary silver, gold certificates, federal reserve bank notes, minor coin, silver dollars and treasury notes. At present the total amount of United States money in circulation is approximately $5,743,000,000, of which more than one-half is in federal reserve notes. Silver coins constitute a relatively small portion of the money in circulation, but this will be considerably increased under the recent proclamation of President Roosevelt, which provides for the coinage of a limited additional amount.

The administration's monetary policies are attracting much attention just now among financial ad economic experts. The layman knows little of what it is all about, and inasmuch as the experts are in thorough disagreement, it seems that they don't know much about it either.

INFANT MORTALITY

In the long list of accomplishments to the credit of modern medical science perhaps none has a greater significance than the success attained in the reduction of childhood deaths.

Queen Anne of England, born in 1664, bore seventeen children, only one of whom lived more than a year, and he died at the age of 11. Now large families of children often mature without a death.

Through medical education and the treatment of early defects the child's chance of reaching maturity has been greatly increased, especially during the last half century. The lengthened average span of human life which now prevails is largely due to reduction of mortality among infants.

In addition to regularly employed physicians and nurses by public health units, thousands of volunteer workers are co-operating in the noble task of saving the lives of babies.

For their effective efforts in this and other directions looking to the preservation of human life, the medical profession and those co-operating are entitled to the highest praise.

From recent important appointments made by President Roosevelt, we conclude that the shortest cut to fame is to first become a college president.

Mrs. Maybelle Block, of Chicago, told a judge that despite the fact that she was 16 inches taller, her husband "looks down on her," and she won her divorce.

SOME ODDS AND ENDS

Police in New Orleans went to arrest James Sherman for an alleged narcotic offense, but when the found that the stork was there, too, they retired in the bird's favor.

When Richard Wright, of Noblesville, Ind., couldn't get his car started he looked under the hood and found a kitten curled up beside the motor.

A bee farm established next to the Sunshine Health Club, a nudist colony, at Salinas, California, caused the nudist to move.

Mrs. Clara Edwards of San Francisco has filed suit for divorce because her husband forced her to eat a package of cigarettes when he found her smoking.

Louis Hart of St. Louis escaped from his burning home with the tail of his nightshirt in flames.

"My ear has been worn out by my wife pulling it," testified Richard Tobin of Chicago in his divorce suit.

An intruder who entered the home of C. V. Graham in Philadelphia took nothing, but left a note saying he enjoyed reading the Bible.

James Carragh of St. Louis got a warrant for Mrs. Louise Chapin, a 270-pound widow who knocked him down with one punch.

Miss Vera Radden of Buffalo refused to have two decayed teeth extracted and as discharged by her employer.

Four days before her daughter was born, Mrs. Everatte Dawes, of Wabash, Ind., contracted the mumps. When the baby arrived, it also had the mumps.

A walking stick made from the paper of 3,000 love letters won a prize at a curio exhibition at Knoddishall, England.

Miss Georgia Dodd of Baltimore has given up her work as manicurist to become a bootblack, "because it offers more profits and excitement."

Given a night's lodging in the jail at Omaha, Clyde Muzzle, a tramp, disappeared the next morning with a sack of valves which had been stored there.

Mrs. Morelle Brayton of Langsing, Mich., has a trained goldfish that responds to her call and eats out of her hand.

Mrs. Genevieve Gordon of London had three complete winter costumes of different colors made for her Pomeranian dog, Peggy.

Mrs. Louise May of St. Louis was ejected from her daughter's wedding when she went to the bridegroom's home without an invitation.

Charles Farnham of Cincinnati was arrested for hanging his hat on the extended hand of a traffic policeman.

After 26 years a postcard mailed August, 20, 1908, in Pasedena, Calif., to Miss Louetta Muchow of Freeport, Ill., reached its destination January 11, 1934.

When his car struck a pig on the highway and overturned, Jess Streetman of Finley, Okla., was killed.

Joseph Lichocky of New York was fined $10 for giving his horse a "nip or two to brace him up."

When he happened to look up from his work into his mirror, Roscoe V. Carroll, a barber of Rock Island, Ill., saw his small son, Jackson struck by a car.

Among the 102 graduates of the high school at Yakima, Washington, to receive diplomas this month is the Rev. John H. Soltman, pastor of the First Evangelical Church.

Hyman Arnove, past 70, went into court at Kankakee, Ill., recently and asked if he could have a divorce from his wife, also past 70, on the ground she deserted him because he wouldn't take her to dances and gay parties.

Twins were born to Mrs. J. V. Lurborrow of Duluth, Minn., at a neighbor's house while her own was burning.

Robert Marxon of Cardiff, Wales, admited that he paid his wife $635 to quit him and go away with a man who loved her.

Mrs. Millie Reynolds of Chicago asked the police if she couldn't "have a vacation from her husband" whom she married thirty four years ago.

Frauline Christine Landern of Berlin was acquitted of theft when she pleaded that her uncle had hypnotized her.

After quarrellnig for 37 years over how knives and forks should be arranged on the table, Charles Bucher and his wife were divorced in Los Angeles.

Many Take Advantage of Educational Lectures

Several thousand residents of San Mateo county were served educationally by the University of California extension division last year, according to a report made by Professor Leon J. Richardson, extension director.

The total number of individuals taking advantage of the facilities offered by the extension division's lecture, class and correspondence departments throughout the state numbered 207,357. In addition, 4,845 orders for educational motion pictures were filled last year by the department of visual instruction, being loaned mostly to public schools and civic organizations.

In San Mateo county there were enrollments in some type of extension work made by persons in Daly City, Belmont, Burlingame, Hillsborough, Menlo Park, Millbrae, Pescadero, Redwood City, San Bruno, San Mateo, South San Francisco and Woodside. The total number of enrollments in correspondence courses for the county was forty-nine. Seven University of California lecturers were sent into the county for special programs. The number of educational motion pictures reelased to San Mateo county totaled ninety-two.

Figures from the National University Extension Association show the University of California extension division ranks first for the United States in the number of students in class courses, and fifth in correspondence course enrollments.

Instruction by correspondence, says Director Richardson, is offered to students anywhere in the state, and may begin at any time.

Requests for detailed information concerning the work, including correspondence, class, lecture, and visual instruction, should be addressed to the University of California, 301 California Hall, Berkeley.

'DOC' TOLD HIM

Grouchy Patient: "Doctor, I sent for you because I am in terrible pain, but I warn you I have no faith in you modern doctors. I believe in the faith cure."

Doctor: "Never mind, your faith has nothing to do with it in this case. You know, a mule has no faith in a veterinary surgeon, and yet the surgeon cures him just the same."

SPLINTERS

From the H. H. Smith Lumber Yard

VOLUME 6 FRIDAY, MARCH 2, 1934 NUMBER 32

Published in the interests of the People of Daly City and vicinity by H. H. Smith and Employees.

A teacher called for sentences using the word "beans."

"My father grows beans," the bright boy of the class said.

"My mother cooks beans," came from another pupil.

Then a third piped up: "We are all human beans."

"Sterling," the wall board of satisfaction.

Sergeant: "Did you shave this morning, Jones?"

Recruit: "Yes, sergeant."

Sergeant: "Well, next time stand a bit closer to the razor."

Questioned about rumors of his impending divorce, an actor said, "My wife will do the talking." As usual.

One day recently a pretty movie star was driving her new car when something went wrong with the engine. The traffic-light changed from green to red and back to green, and still she to budge. The traffic cop came up.

"What's the matter, Miss?" he inquired. "Ain't we got colors you like?"

Everything to build anything.

Mistress: "I notice that your policeman friend calls frequently. Do you think he means business?"

Cook: "I think he does. He's already beginning to complain about my cooking."

Many poets are unemployed, and in most cases it might be well to pay them to remain so.

Confidence is the companion of success.

Kitchen: "I gave the professor a large slice of layer cake for his lunch."

Humidoreas: "We all wondered where he got the geologic specimen he was lecturing on."

Roofing Paper—all grades.

When a man is chasing the almighty dollar he forgets that there is a God, and when he is chasing women he forgets there is a devil.

It has been suggested that a woman shedding tears was the first practical water development.
